Each paycheck you receive from your employer has income tax deductions subtracted from it. That is due to the fact that both federal and state governments impose income tax throughout the calendar year. This helps you understand just how much money was made and how much went to taxes in a specific set period. A W2 form received in January 2021 for instance, will reflect the income and deductions of the year 2020.

You can also use AGI to determine other deductions. Some, deduct medical expenses but you can only do that if your medical deductions exceed a certain percentage of your AGI. Find out more about AGI and how you can calculate it from your W2 form. Below you will find some of the boxes found on your W2 form discussed with their meaning at a glance.
