An appeals court heard arguments in December, and everyone is now awaiting a ruling.

Ron DeSantis and the Seminole Tribe agreed to a 30-year deal called a compact. The U.

Department of the Interior, overseer of American Indian affairs, allowed the contract to go through under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, which governs the framework for tribal gambling.

In the ruling, the judge called the idea that sports betting was taking place on tribal land because the servers would be housed on tribal land "a fiction.

An attorney for the plaintiffs, however, said that the government could not say the compact was in line with the IGRA if it did allow gambling to occur off tribal lands.

"If you are remotely tempted to accept their argument, I beg you, make it c ystal clear that your order says this secretary's approval does not in any way authorize the gambling that takes place off Indian land," said attorney

Hamish Hume.

Wallach tweeted that he suspects a ruling to come in the next few months.
